

The writer of the issue contends that some people state that college students should consider only their own talents and interests when they choose a field of study. While some others believe that college students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in that field. In what follows the main reasons posited by both groups are first discussed and then my own position would be delineated.

As was stated already, there are some others who believe that college students should consider only their own talents and interests when choosing a field of study. These people without talent in the field of study, studying will be hard for student and they cannot finish their college. In addition, studying in a field without interest is the most reason that some students are depressed and don't like to study.

The author of the issue claimed that some people believe the college students should consider only their own talents and interests when choosing a field of study, and others believe that college students should base their choice of a field of study on the availability of jobs in the field. Although the availability of jobs is an important issue, in my point of view the adherence to the field of interest and talents is more important.

What does interest means? When we say we are interested in some thing? Interest of a person is his/her propensity to do something. A person is interested in a work when s/he feels extreme joy and solace and less fatigue while doing it. It's depended on several factors including familial history, the undergraduate studies and also others such as media, etc. The child of two doctors, who grows in an environment inundated with medical issues, is more probable to become a doctor in the future in comparison with the likelihood to become a physicist. The child of a well-known actor may become a good actor in the future as well. About the role of undergraduate studies, we cannot disregard the important role of teachers in making a person's personality and therefore his/her interests. A good teacher for biology will attract the students to the field of biology or medicine. The media and society has some impacts too. The propaganda of television programs about football can make every child interested in football.
